Defector offers data on Soviet spy network

The Soviet Union has up to 40 military intelligence agents working in Britain in addition to KGB spies, a Soviet defector said in an interview on British radio yesterday.

The defector, who uses the pseudonym Victor Suvarov, said he had been a major in the GRU military intelligence network, which he said was run out of the Soviet Embassy in London.

Many GRU spies worked in the Soviet trade delegation, he said. "It is the best imaginable cover."
